

Quiet

Michael Schein

When the women stopped speaking we could still hear them. They spoke with their breath, their tears, their breasts. In the steamy cold of twilight, they spoke with downcast eyes. Where are my children? they asked.
Where are my soft, naked children?
It was so quiet, we had to cover our ears.

